California Worker Keeps on Truckin'

S & S Trucking warehouse manager Justin Roberts wanted to interview and hire workers for a new facility in Ontario, Calif., but he didn't have time to sift through hundreds of resumes. So he turned to the County of San Bernardino Workforce Investment Board for help. The board offered to screen applicants and refer the most qualified to Roberts for consideration. This process was part of the board's On-the-Job Training Program, which also helps offset wages for the first 90 days of employment and training. "The board took the guesswork out of hiring," Roberts said, "and helped a small business save some money." One of the job applicants was recently unemployed Louis Garcia, who received career guidance and resume help and eventually was referred to S & S Trucking. The program "helped out tremendously," said Garcia, who has since been promoted to assistant warehouse manager.
